Elsewhere in this issue is a reproduction of a bill, a specimen of the sort of goods handed out to a concern in Bellevue. This bill was turned out by an individual who has been picking up type from the sweepings of certain offices in Alberta and British Columbia, with which he hopes to compete with well established and equipped offices. The press work done by some sort of an ordinary squeezing apparatus—perhaps some fat man or woman who in "raw material" carried considerable weight. As a result of this elaborate scheme of advertising, an audience of over a dozen people witnessed a show, the importance of which was not exaggerated by the advertiser.

Fire destroyed a warehouse belonging to Wilfrid Walsch, located on Ninth Avenue, on Tuesday night. The origin of the fire is a mystery, but parties living in the neighborhood report having heard some party prowling around at a very late hour. Fire broke out about midnight and was first noticed from the Oddfellows' hall, where a meeting was in progress. The alarm was immediately made and the whistles of the mine and cement plant, as well as the alarm bell at the school soon attracted a large crowd. As the building was but a frame structure and contained only a few bundles of hay, it flames spread but a short way. The first hose reel was unrolled by Chief Allen, of McLaren's mill, while Chief Burrows looked after the manipulation of the hose and supervision of the fire fighting. The hydrant at the corner of Eighth Avenue and Victoria Street was found to be frozen and it was necessary to make connection with a hydrant on State Street, thus occasioning considerable loss of time. A good stream of water saved an adjoining warehouse and stable from destruction, but the outer walls were considerably charred. As a result of the fire, the telephone cable was put out of business, demoralizing the system for several days. We understand that the building was only partly covered by insurance, while no insurance was carried on the contents owned by Joseph Handley. Much credit is due Chiefs Burrows and Allen for the prompt and able manner in which they handled their "fire-dogs." Someone informed us that the latter is aspiring to the former's position, which carries with it a greater salary. Here's luck to you, Bill. Hope you will manage to introduce the right sort of lubrication for the axle grease used on the hose reels either become frozen or has met the fate of Pompeii. Fortunately there was little or no wind at the time of the fire, for had one of the famous "eastern" blows blowing there is no doubt but that the greater part of the town would have been destroyed.
